I've been a mountain biker for many years, but I now have come to the conclusion that mountain biking and sustaining our natural world are too often in conflict. Studies have shown wildlife retreats further from mountain biking trails than hiking trails leading to less comfortable habitat and declining numbers of wildlife-who are already stressed by the constant encroachment of human activities throughout the Northern Rockies. Society is fast reaching a tipping point in facing up to human dominance over too much of the natural world. We need to give back to nature rather than endlessly taking more and more of it for our enjoyment. Discontinuing mountain biking in Lionhead is the right thing to do. Please make this wise decision in favor of nature and wildlife. There already is lots of trails and places to ride bikes. THank you
