I am in support of Alternative D, protecting as much land into Wilderness as possible. I think that we have lost way too much unmolested land on the planet already, and that recreation should not be a reason to use the land in a way that compromises its integrity. It's as plain and simple as that. Scientists have been clear that the lands in the Gallatin Range that are being sacrificed into non-Wilderness designations - which both experience and common sense tell us will not get protection equal to big W - are crucial ecological spaces that will be harmed by lesser protections. It is short-sighted, selfish, and terribly Colorado-like of us to give away this land to recreation.
